"ROMEO AND JULIET" -AT THE CETY HALL.

-THE Bandmann-Beaudet Combination appeared at the Theatre Royal, City Hall, last night, in Shakespere's immortal tragedy Romeo and Juliet, with Herr Bandmann and Mdlle Beaudet in the characters of the lovers of fair Verona. The audience was a fairly large, and although at times inclined to be mirthful, may be described as a highly appreciative one. And it was as well that good nature reigned supreme throughout the house, for a very extensive exercise of that virtue was necessary, in the face of the most extraordinary representation of Shakespere's splendid work, it has ever been our lot to witness.

Herr Bandmann appeared as the 'gentle Romeo,' and 'made that interesting youth in almost all respects a fac simile of the same artiste's Hamlet, not even excepting the celebrated black gloves, and "suits of woe" which were displayed conspicuously in the last act. As we have already stated in previous critiques, Herr Bandmann is an actor of great power and intelligence, -of a certain class-however, in the interests of truth we are compelled to express our opinion that he is absolutely the very worst Romeo, for 'an actor of renown, that ever essayed the part, and we are really surprised, considering that Herr Bandmann cannot help knowing how unfitted he is physically for such a juvenile lover, he can expose himself to ridicule and laughter by burlesqueing one of Shakespere's guileless, pouring out all the beauty of a most finest creations. It will be noted we are not at all mealy-mouthed in appraising the dramatic an ungaudging, unsuspecting love, hers is the very merits of Herr Bandmann. As a matter of fact, this self-asserted "star tragedian" has such an exaggerated idea of his own abilities, and status as a Shakesperenn actor, that we consider it advisable for his own sake, as well as in the interests of honest criticism, to undeceive him to the fullest possible extent. Churchill, one of the best friends the dramatic profession ever possessed, and at the same time the keenest and best critic of his day, once said in scorn of critics wh were in the habit of "puffing" indifferent actors:

"Bow down, ye slaves! before these idols fall; Let ger us stoop to them who 've none at a'l." Unfortunately there are many of the class satirised in these lines still degrading independent journalism, as Herr Bandmann's experiences amply testify, and of whose criticisms Bishop Hall

"Shame that the Muses should be bought and sold, For every peasant's brass, on each scaffold," Herr Bandmann, it must be admitted on all sides, is physically unsuited for the youthful scion of the hated Montagues. It is possible that in the dim and far distant past he may have looked less like a fat Cupid, and possessed the graceful symmetry of mould naturally identified with our ideal of the Italian poet-lover, At present the great

which he is as little qualified as the main body of the company supporting him-rather than a good ranting, rearing melodrama, which his special acquirements would enable him to play admirably. This would be infinitely better than making burlesques of Hamlet and Romeo; however, we are quite willing to admit that there is no accounting for tastes, and, presuming that the stamping on the floor, and other noises made by the colored portion of the audience may be taken as signs of public approbation, it is evident that the critical tastes of at least one section of our play-goers do not coincide with our own. Shakespece's plays have never previously been performed here, and consequently may be more likely to prove a draw, so far as certain classes of the community are concerned, than other less known works, and as Herr Bandmann's campaign is for the purpose of making money, he may be justified in sacrificing high art at the shrine of self interest. The Romeo of last night is a mere follower of the traditional'old school of acting, a style which the intelligent critics of modern days ridicule and laugh at. Those who have witnessed with feelings of pleasure the decadence of this system of socalled dramatic art, which sacrificed sense to sound, intelligent rendering of the text to deeptoned mouthing, and real art to stereotyped artificiality, can find little to appreciate in the "stagey" creations of Heir Bandmann. His Romeo is a shallow trickster, and a blatant ranter. The inherent beauties of some of the finest passages were utterly spoiled by the tragedian's penchant for bellowing. It would be a thankless task following such a Romeo through the various stages of the play, so we will not attempt it. Herr Bandmann displayed plenty "tragic power," but his conception of the character was altogether at fault, whilst the lack of refinement, delicacy, and even intelligence in his execution was sadly conspicuous.

Had Mille Beaudet been better supported, she would have made a far more satisfactory Juliet. The omission of Lady Capulet from the cast, the inexperience of Capulet and Friar Lawrence, the important character of the Nurse in the hands of a comparative novice, and a fanting Romeo were enough to have spoiled a far better actress than this young lady has any pretensions to be. Still Mille Beaudet-apart from her Bandmann-isms -is a clever artiste, and her Juliet possessed sufficient merits to constitute it the greatest attraction of the piece. We need scarcely say that no fair comparison could be drawn between the Juliet of Mille Beaudet, and that of Helen Faucit, Kate Terry, or Lilian Adelaide Neilson. Melle Beaudet lacks neither grace, power, or intelligence, but doubtless as a fault of the school where her experiences have been acquired, her elocution is faulty, her style melodramatic, and she has evidently had no opportunities of acquiring that polish and refinement which mark the accomplished high class actress. In modern days we have had no such Juliet as Lilian Neilson. Since 1865, when she first appeared in the character at the Royalty, up to the time of her death, she was without a rival. Miss Neilson as the fair Capulet was the ideal heroine of the sweetest, and saddest idyl of romance and passion that the world has ever known. By no other actress-at least of modern days-has the "full fatefulness and terror, the deep burning splendour of passion, the exquisite simplicity and the caressing grace of Juliet been revealed." As a friend of ours once wrote: "To fashion her love scenes, it seemed as, if the scents of the Italian rose-beds and the song of the countless nightingales had been crushed out, while the conjured visions in the potion scene displayed an electricity which is only known in the storms of southern climes." Those who have seen what has been termed the infantile grace of cajolery with which Miss Neilson was wont in the balcony scene to give utterance to the lines,

"Stry but a little, I will come again," will never forget the effect it had on the audience;

and her winning grace in a con-

"Wilt thou be gone ? it is not yet near day " beggars description. What was written of Miss O'Neill in 1814 might well have been applied to Miss Neilson:

" bo much of deep rouli a

Lives in the poet's glowing scene, And it identified by Trike More than has ever been;

That o'er thy we take the young head; Meetles and the teast of feeling store?

Fair Plant of the modernage!

Pirme the path which Fame Points out, through Shakespere's chained page, And tains with His -ray name! A For his the Actor's Pring scene

That keeps the Poet's larrely green !"

Juliet, observes Professor Morley, is an innocent Italian child, enjoying with an exquisitely simple honesty the first passion of love. Artless, pure girl-hood in the newly awakened poetry of last character to be represented by the stage artifices and grimaces of a French ingelune. However, Mdlle Beaudet, for so young and inexperienced nn netress, proved effective in many passages, and in better hands and under different auspices, might win herself a name. Mr. D'Orsay Ogden has not previously appcared to such advantage as in Mercutio. An and quarrelsome Italian gallant was cleverly worked out by the actor, and although the celebrated Queen Mab speech fell rather flat, in all other respects Mr. Ogden's impersonation was worthy of praise. Miss Fergusson worked hard as the Nurse, but was of course overweighted in a character entirely unsuited to her abilities. The other members of the company require no special reference. improvement on all previous efforts, the tomb from a cut, marks on the left hand as from a bite; of the Capulets being capitally arranged. During the second act, in the scene between 'A police sergeant added that when the prisoner Romeo, Mercutio, and Benvolio, what might was charged, she said "I know I did it. I have, have been a serious accident occurred. One of hit them hard." The boy afterwards showed the small scenes suddenly came down with a witness a poker, which he said his grandmother crash, the actors on the stage having a very had struck him with. The case of the girl was Polish-Hebraic-Anglo-German tragedian is far | narrow escape. The dauntless Bandmann grew | much worse: She said that her grandmother had more physically litted for such a substantial im. as pale as his shirt collar, and for a few seconds - knocked her about with a boot, forced her heighpersonation as that of Falstaff, than of the young | was unable to proceed with the play." This was and romantic Veronese. Candidly speaking it scarcely to be marvelled at, for if the scene had is a pity such an experienced Thespian should struck the tragedian it would have most certainly place, and bit her. This grandmotherly soul preser to represent Shakesperian characters-for have either killed or severely injured him.

A PARADE and Inspection of the Government and Volunteer Fire Brigades will take place at the Central Fire Brigade Station at 4.30 to-day.

----WE are informed by the Agent of the O. & O. S. S. Co., that the steamer Arable, with San Francisco mails, &c., has arrived at Yokohama, and sails for this port to-morrow, the 15th inst. The Company's steamer Oceanic left San Francisco for this port on the 6th instant.

As will be noted from an advertisement in given by the Officers of the Buffs in the Garrison Theatre, on the evenings of Saturday and Monday next, and not on Friday as previously announced. The performance on Saturday will be chiefly for the soldiers of the Garrison.

THE case in which Mr. Claribew, wardmaster of the Government Civil Hospital, charged the with having adulterated the article, was finally disposed of this morning by Mr. Wodehouse. It will be remembered that on the 6th instant, Mr. Claribew, as soon as the milkman brought the milk to the hospital, seized a portion of it, and sent it to the Government Analyst to be analysed. Mr. McCallum's analysis resulted in discovering 16 per cent, of water, of an unknown quality, in the milk, and that gentleman said, he ! had previously found as much as 51 per cent. of water in milk supplied by the same man. -The defendant stated this moraing that there were hospital people looking on when the cow was milked, and so he could not have adulterated it.-Mr. Wodelfouse imposed a fine of five pounds, in default seven days' imprisonment We think there are few, if any, householders who, milk supplied them analysed, would not have good grounds for prosecuting their milkman. But then the bother is so great.

The report which reached our ears was to the effect that the eminent (?) tragedian, because we had refused to believe that he could play Hamlet as well as Henry Irving, had retaliated by using personal violence towards the Reporter of the Telegraph; in fact, had kicked that distinguished individual out of the City Hall on the evening of Saturday last. We of course laughed at the report, which we took as a mere idle rumour, food for gossips, as we knew from past experience that Mr. Bandmann's violence was invariably used on women and children, and that any indignity of Chinaman who supplies milk to the hospital the kind named offered to our Reporterwho is an old pupil of Nat Langham's and great on muscle-would inevitably have subjected the violent tragedian to the most severe castigation he has received since our old office chum, Herbert Crellin, threshed him within an inch of his life for striking a woman at rehearsal on the stage of the Lyceum Theatre in London, more than a dozen years ago. However, as our informant assured us that Mr. Bandmann had triumphantly related to him personally the particulars of this one-sided kicking match, we, still unbelieving, considered it advisable, seeing that the rumour was rapidly circulating through the Colony, to investigate the matter. The results of our inquiries are as tollows:-A young Portuguese lad who was a clerk in our establishment for a short time, but who if they took the trouble to have a sample of the left our service six months ago, appears to have found his way behind the scenes on Saturday night, 'where he was 'accosted by the fiery Bandmann, who had just received information that an article on "Tragic Power" had appeared in the Telegraph that afternoon, and was at fever heat in consequence. Nor can we see what object "the blighted tragedian" had in view, in boasting of an exploit, which to say the least, was merely a miserable display of mean cowardice, unworthy of a man, although no doubt agreeable to the vain conceits of a confirmed womanbeater. We know Mr. Daniel E. Bandmann, and haveknown and despised him for many years. THE BUILDERS' STRIKE-CHINESE RIOTING IN SHANGHAI.

The whole community were disturbed towards the end of yesterday by rumours of a startling character anent the uprising of a large body of discontented Chinese. It was reported that another edition of the Ningpo joss house riot was to be produced by the malcontent builders and masons on strike, and the civilian soldiery would have to be called out to restrain the rioters. To wards night the rumours thickened. The "sensation" of the afternoon was discussed at every dinner table in a most vigorous manner, and with loud colouring and exaggeration. It was represented that over five thousand Chinese had assembled at the back of the Racquet Court and had threatened to burn down the Mixed Court, then march on the Settlements, and work their own "sweet will," Furthermore, it was whispered that the police, who were armed, had a battle with the rioters and had to withdraw, and that the volunteers were to be called to the front and the settlements placed in a state of siege. Stories like these went the rounds of the houses then it was definitely known that the Maloo was quieter than usual, that there was not the sign of a disturbance at the Racquet Court, and except the policemen who were on guard there, and a few horsemen who patrolled the streets, things were in a normal state. A stimulus to fresh fear was furnished by the grave assurances of some knowing ones that the malcontents had repaired to the city to discuss the plan of operations, and that they would swoop from thence when foreign Shanghai was wrapped in darkness, and manifest their presence by demoniac yells, by firing the Mixed Court and other places, and indulging in the excitement of a general massacre. If anticipation were to be realised, the fire bell was to ring, and then each volunteer was to rush to arms. In this state of feel ing the excitable and feminine portion of Shanghai retired to their respective sleeping apartments. Divested of sensational colouring and exaggeration, the whole facts of the case bore no resemblance to the circulated reports or to the anticipations founded on these exciting rumours.

The emeute had its origin in the dispute between the masons and carpenters and the contractors, which we dealt with in our leading columns on Thursday. In addition to the reasons of complaint we then mentioned, the strikers had another grievance—and that related to the squeezes that had been practised by some of the contractors, and the character of the food served out to the workmen. The workmen complained that they were squeezed to the extent of eight per cent on cash exchange, and were "cut" in other respects. They specially complained of one contractor, who had made himself obnoxious on that account. Furthermore, the "strikers" demanded three dry rice meals instead of two dry and one wet per diem. On these grounds the men "struck," and were determined to suspend operations till their grievances were adjusted. The men on strike hearing that a certain contractor had engaged a number of masons to do work on some buildings in the Canton Road, in place of those that had left, went to the new comers and attempted to induce them to suspend operations. Mild measures having failed to effect this, the strikers held a consultation in their headquarters, which are in the city, and we believe a resolution was arrived at to adopt active measures to compel the obnoxious contractor and his nien to desist from further work. The process of intimidation was begun mildly at first; but the "boycotted contractor," fearing that a scrimmage would ensue, gave information to the police to the effect that certain men were intimidating his workmen. Two of the men were arrested by the foreign police on a charge of intimidation and two others were apprehended by the native constables. The four accused men were brought before Chen yesterday, the court being crowded at the time by adherents of the strikers, who pretty plainly said that should Chen adjudicate adversely to their interests they would carry him off and hold him as hostage. Chen was not inclined to act firmly with the accused, being probably frightened at the serious attitude the malcontents assumed. He simply bound over the prisoners to keep the peace, and the men were removed into one of the cells while the necessary bonds were being prepared. The excited crowd, thinking that the men were to be imprisoned, made a rush to the cells and would have released them had it not been for an explanation of the Chinese clerk and the interference of the foreign policemen present, who behaved with great coolness on this trying occasion. The necessary documents having been drawn up, Chen, who had in some respects yielded to the threats of the mob, released the men on their formally guaranteeing to refrain from intimidating acts. This by no means satisfied the insurgent crowd who wished to wreak their vengeance on one of the contractors, who had made himself odious to them, by carrying him off to the city. One account says that this contractor sought refuge for the time in Chen's Yamen ; but this is not perhaps stretly correct. All all events he was non est inventus for some time. Later in the day, the crowd of strikers with a multitude of onlookers, numbering in all from between four to five thousand persons, assembled in front of the contractor's building, which is situated in the new road at the back of the Racquet Court, and threatened to destroy the premises. The contractor sent to the Police Station for protection. Sergeant Wilson, accompanied by two or three constables, proceeded to the scene of the disturbance, but the mob assailed them with such a shower of stones that they had to take shelter in the house, where they were joined by a foreign volunteer. The police behaved with great coolness under the circumstances, but could do nothing against the overwhelming numbers to which they were opposed, especially as the age, two policemen were slightly injured, and one foreigner had a very narrow escaped indeed from being impaled. However, he gallantly made his escape and reported the matter to the Central Police Station, while another account of the emeule was received at the Louza Station. Mr. Penfold, who had, we understand, previously visited the scene of the disturbances, thereupon armed all the available police with rifles and bayonets and marched them to the disturbed locality. The malcontents in the meantime had carried off the contractor's foreman into the city, threatening that if they were resisted in their progress through the English settlement they would barricade themselves and make a firm stand, which they were in a position to do, as some of them were armed with old pistols and long knives. When the police arrived on the spot, the excitement of the crowd evaporated, for as one of the prime movers in the affair said "the police must be very angry and mean business when they bring with them guns." A slight scrimmage occurred; but there was absolutely no immediate danger, for the majority of the crowd were simply spectators. However, it was said that the mutineers were concerting measures in the city, and would return about ten o'clock and renew their tumultuous action, and as the native authorities were powerless, and the men were highly excited against the foreigners for their interference, there was a foundation of reason, if not of fact, in the report. The volunteers were not idle. In obedience to a circular issued. No. 1 Company mustered at the Police compound before to o'clock where everything was in readiness for an emergency. Several of the light horse under their officers were also present. The commandant addressed the volunteers tersely and in a business like manner; but contrary to expectation their services were not required, and they were subsequently dismissed, it being understood they should assemble at the compound should the fire-bell ring the usual peal. Several of the light horse patrolled that part of the settlement where an outbreak was expected, and we noticed that sentries were set at the French Concession near the East gate of the city. At half-past eleven our representative visited the disturbed locality and then the Maleo was unusually, perhaps ominously quiet, and at the back of the Racquet Court nothing but a few vagrant Chinese could be seen. Watch and guard were kept there all night by the police who occupied the post of danger as they would have been the first to feel the shock of a night

To-day everything is quiet. The subject of yesterday's disturbance was being eagerly discussed in the tea-houses this morning, and all sorts of gossip is in circulation respecting the future proceedings that will be taken in the matter. It is pretty certain that the rioters are afraid of the action they have taken and the dangers they were exposed to in their excitement of yesterday. We have not heard what has been done by the city authorities in the matter; but it is said that they have arrested some of the rioters, and steps will be taken to enquire into the whole affair.—Courier.

THE IRISH TRAGEDY.

The following particulars relating to the murder of Lord Frederick Cavendish, and Mr. Burke, in Phœnix Park, Dublin, are taken from our San-Francisco exchanges, received yesterday by the City of Peking :-

New York, May 8th. A cable special gives the following additional points of the assassination :- All accounts agree that the assassins were four in number, and drove in a park car, but none of the spectators were sufficiently near to be able to identify either the car of its occupants. The only evidence in this direction is to the effect that the car was a redbacked one, and that after the murder it was driven rapidly toward Chapel-Izod, a suburb of Dublin. From the nature of the wounds, death must in each case have been almost instan-The Attorney-General for Ireland started for Dublin on the mail train last night and the same train conveyed thither a select contingent force of London detectives.

DUBLIN, May 8th. Three men of the "corner boy" class were arrested on suspicion at the village of Chapel-Izod to-day, unable to give an account of themselves. They stated that last night they slept in fields, one adding afterwards that he slept in a lodging house in Church lane. The latest information is that the park ranger saw a car with red panels, in which four rough-looking men were scated pass out of the Chapel-Izod road. He adds that he has a good idea of the appearance of the driver

Mr. Gladstone virtually meant to direct the government of Ireland himself. It would be impossible for Mr. Gladstone to make any programme to resist the terrible shock till he could have time to measure the effect of the deed. Forster thought that much inspiration for the deed came from O'Do. novan and other Irish-Americans, who had repeatedly urged the people to kill his father. CORK, May 8th,

. A meeting of citizens, including all Nationalists and Land Leaguers, was held yesterday. The Mayor presided. Even the extreme Land Leaguers who were present suggested the closing of shops as a mark of sympathy. Resolutions were unanimously adopted declaring the crime one which calls on Heaven for vengeance, and repudiating its authors with disgust and abhorrence. Speculation is rife as to the origin-of the conspiracy. It is suggested that Irish-American emissaries were employed to commit the crime. A telegram from Limerick to-night states that Clifford Lloyd has received information that three men had left America to assassinate him. This, it is thought, gives color to the surmise that the Dublin tragedy may have had its origin in a similar conspiracy.

> ST. LOUIS, May 8th. The following dispatch was sent to Mr. Glad-

The Irish of every grade abhor the assassination of Lord Cayendish and Mr. Burke. They sympathize with you and their families. They regret that so bemous a crime should have ushered in what had promised to be the most glorious epoch of your administration. The crime is on a parallel with the murder of President Lincoln in this country, while advocating the pacific committed. PEORIA, III., May 8th. Patrick Crowe, notorious for fathering the recent scheme to blow up British ships by infernal machines, believes the assassinations of Saturday evening were due to the hatred for Burke, and that. Cavendish was only killed as a matter of protection. 'Burke was the Under Secretary of the Government at the time of the Fenian troubles, and made himself thoroughly obnoxious to the Fenians, and was the most malignant enemy of the Irish race, and detested by it most vigorously. He was lost sight of in the recent troubles, but had been denounced as bitterly as Forster was. The Fenians (not the Land Leaguers) had killed him. It was understood that he would try to crush out the secret societies, which are the strength of Ireland. England is afraid of assassination, and it might eventually Sale, apply to dynamite hero, he would like to see several hundred of the Government officers killed. CHICAGO, May 8th. Reports from many of the leading cities in this country speak of meetings of the Land League, which, without exception, passed resolutions of abhorrence and execration at the assassination of Cavendish and Burke. The leading editorials, generally, are to the effect that the deed was a very severe blow to Ireland's cause.
